

APHR Consultancy Notice

External Consultant for Malaysia Legislative Advocacy Toolkit Development

A. Project Title

Malaysia Legislative Advocacy Toolkit

B. Background

The region's leaders are increasingly resorting to adopting laws that restrict fundamental freedoms. In this context, parliamentarians, through their legislative mandate, become an important shield against further erosion of rights. MPs can repeal, or amend restrictive laws as they reach parliament.

To be able to engage them effectively APHR and civil society organizations in Southeast Asia must be able to understand and know the parliamentary legislative process well. For APHR this would allow us to better empower our members to use their mandate to reform rights-restricting laws, and to advocate their governments to protect human rights for all.

As such, APHR conducted research in five countries in Southeast Asia, including Malaysia, to better understand and unpack the legislative process. The research covers what is the legislative process, including the different stages a bill can go through, how to write an amendment, who can initiate a bill, what is the usual practice in the country, as well as identify effective entry points for law reform advocacy. This research will be developed into a pedagogical, visual, and engaging toolkit to be disseminated among parliamentarians, APHR staff and members, and civil society members to aid in legislative advocacy work.

C. Scope of Work

APHR is looking for a consultant to draft a short, pedagogical, and engaging toolkit explaining the different steps in the legislative procedures in Malaysia. The toolkit will be presented as a practical and accessible tool for APHR's staff and members, members of parliament in the Philippines and their staff, and key civil society partners. The output will be published online, launched through a national level workshop with APHR Members, the researcher, and members of civil society in Malaysia. The toolkit will be based on a research output that is already available
